CRANBERRY TWP — Traco will receive more than $1.3 million in federal economic recovery money to make better windows.

The Cranberry Township-based company produces energy-efficient windows and will get the money as part of the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act.

"We are thrilled to receive this funding," said Robin Randall, vice president of corporate marketing for Traco. "This will enable us to remain on the cutting edge of technology, which benefits not only our company, but the health of our community."

With the Recovery Act funding that it is receiving through the Department of Energy, Traco will be able to produce energy efficient windows for commercial buildings in a more cost-effective manner.

"The Recovery Act is making a difference in communities all across Western Pennsylvania," Rep. Jason Altmire, D-4th, said. "The Recovery Act is investing in initiatives that will strengthen our economy both now and in the years to come."
